WINSTON-SALEM, NC, – Wake Forest University and Graylyn International Conference Center are pleased to announce their completion of The Mews at Graylyn renovation project. After a six-month interval, the entire Mews experience has been redesigned to lend every suite, guest room, and public space a modern day touch within an old world setting.

The Mews at Graylyn was originally designed by Eccles D. Everhart as the stables for the Gray family estate. An Atlanta-based interior design firm, Sims Patrick Studio, was commissioned to develop a new interior style that would meld the French inspired architecture of the original stable design with current luxury travel expectations. Throughout the process, insightful feedback was solicited from valued past guests and LEED practices and resources were considered when implementing design changes. The spectacular result presents Graylyn's elegant aesthetic in a fresh, new manner.

A total of 35 guestrooms and suites are offered in The Mews at Graylyn including new estate and premium suites. New to the complex are a Fitness Center equipped with strength and cardiovascular machines, a Business Services Center, Gift Shop, as well as a dedicated check-in and hospitality area. The renovated Mews Conference and Mews Dining rooms retain their original square footage but have been completely redesigned with a fourth breakout space added to create more flexibility for meetings and events.

Each of the guestrooms feature new custom-designed furnishings, fabrics, wall coverings, and carpets. The finishing touches speak to guest luxury and comfort with premium linens, down comforters and Molton Brown amenities. The Louie Baker Suite - sitting room featured on right - is just one of the new premium suites; its bedroom and bath continue the modern day meets old world theme with period details, luxury fixtures, a soaking tub, and a fabulous walk-in shower.

Guests who stay in The Mews at Graylyn will no doubt appreciate its unique private setting, beautiful surroundings, and full service experience. It's truly a place like no other.
