How it Works:
Participants form teams and elect a specific duty: food slicer, ice scooper, blender operator, ingredients curator, work space attendant, and presentation designer. One large station will be set up in the middle of the room filled with a variety of items (think Iron Chef). Each team will have a choice of fruits, berries, ices, yogurts, juices, and additional items to make them say, “Hmmm, what is that?” (like spices, hot sauces, chocolate sauces, jams, pre-serves, salts, peppers, and more!) This will both add to the mystery of making the perfect smoothie and cause the guests to say, “Hey, am I supposed to put salt in this concoction?” Each team is given 45 minutes to make their perfect recipe. At the conclusion, Graylyn’s Chef will determine the winner based on a taste test coupled with the team’s ingredient cards. They will be judged on taste, creativity of team and smoothie name, work space cleanliness, and best overall winner. Once the winners have been announced, groups have the opportunity to walk around and taste their competitor’s products.

The chef may prepare the winning smoothie as directed on the recipe card for the mid-morning or mid-afternoon break.

Each team will compete to have the best replicated drawing of the object. They will be judged by how similar the replicated drawing is to the object and how fast they are able to complete this task. This requires team members to practice high-quality communication skills with one another and work together as a team to be the winners of this task.
